OF PENNSYLVANIA Bubject to the Decision of the Republican National Convention.

Guilty or not Guilty ! From the St James' Magazine

I confoss to feeling some scruple in writing this paper I may be raising some doubts in the minds of many as to the interfity of a character which they have ever been taught to regard as antished. The charge is a serious one—a very fearful one indeed, and made, too, against one entitled by his misfortune to our teneration and pity. The pious ill fatted monrach Louis XVI, is he who stands at the bar, and he is charged with who stands at the bif, and he is charged with poisoning.

Whether the charge be true or talse will probably near be known. It may be remembered that the discovery of a sceret from chest in the Tailleries, and the papers which it contained, were the primary grounds of the accusation of Louis XVI. The discovery of this chest was due to the locksmith, brancels Gamain, who had made it for the King. It was this man who was thus the mesns of bringing the unkappy monarch to the guillotine, it was the moreover, who, a little later, bulanned a ficeree of Convention pronouncing the King guilty of an attempt at our der dent. It is all that the most radical Republican could ask for. Even the Tribute, so chary of its praise of Grant, so suspicions of his coming up to its required standard of Republicanism, is de-lighted with what it styles Grant's "curnest proagainst the suspension of Stanton. "his bearty indersement" of Sheridan. It says of the letter "that it more than justifies the assections of friends who have claimed that he is in full accord with Congress and its policy of reconstruction. It will be read with interest and delight as the track avowal of a sincere patriot."

There are a few points in this letter worthy of 1st, It was of a " private" and not "official character. It was not intended to see the light, nor indited for popular effect. From these cir enustances, it derives more than hall its value, as an index of the political sentiments which are privately charished by the author, although not os tentationaly paraded before the constry, for the sake of making party capital for himself.

ments, but as a man who has a mind of his own and who will not tomely and passively submit to see injustice done without a firm and dignifled protest. The Tribune, at the time of Stanton's nd Sheridan's removal, hastily and passionately charged Grant with consenting to be made the instrument of the President's wrong doing.-How fully Grant's letter, refutes this idea, the reader can see for himself.

III. The noble, generous nature of General bant shines most conspicuously in this protest. Ills heart seems to kindle With mingled pride and affection when he refers to "Little Phil." It is like the friend-bip between father and son. It calls to mind the relations of mutual confidence and trust, which subsisted between Washington and Hamilton in the days of the Revolution. What an unconscious elequence breather

the Tausville Union School, on Friday last, attracted a large number of the parents and friends of pupils, desiring to testify by their presence their interest in the pensperity of the in

The average attendance during the last quarter has been about three buildred and seventy five pupils, divided among the six different de partments. The largest attendance has been in the primary deportment, where upwards of nine-ty purpose have been accommodated, atthough at great measurement, and where it became necessary to employ an assistant and arrange a new recitation 100m, to relieve the extraordinary pressure. In the remaining five departments the attendance has averaged between fifty and clary each, which is below the actual capacity of the several rooms. The public exercises on Fildry of Har a ton h were necessarily conducted in the respective of Material's Thom, san departments, and hence the visitors were variously attracted. Such exercises as we were personally enabled to witness we feel that we can heartily commend. The examinations in all the subordinate departments evinced faithful and painstaking instruction on the part of the teachers. and a gratifying degree of proficiency among the pupils. The discipline seemed equally good.

The more interesting and varied extreives of course occurred in the senior department, among the older scholars. Examinations were had in mental and practical arithmetic, French, Latin and English grommer, and geometry. The geo-grophy recontions were omitted for want of time, and the exercises concluded with declumations and compositions. We have yet to fearn that the exhibition was not in every respect gratflying to those in attend mee. It is too frequently the case that scholars me made to prepare themselves with especial reference to public exercises, and in many instances succeed in making a show of abquirements which they do not really possess. There was evidently nothing of this sort in Friday's programme. In some of the exerelses the pupils were severely catechized in regard to the principles of their instruction, and very clearly showed that they had been beauted to think and investigate for themselves, instead of to depend upon the mechanical illustration-

At the conclusion of the stated exercises to marks were made by Rev J. N. Welb, in the course of which he complimented the scholars ipon the excellent habits of thought which they had evidently acquired. Col. Cogswell especially approved; the arithmetical examinations, and commended the proficiency of the pupils in this important branch of education. Mr. S. Minne briefly addressed the school in an entertaining strain, and spoke in a kindly advisory way incegord to the declamations. We believe that teachers and scholars have ample cause for grat-

"On the norrow I was assonished and amony-do to see Durey reappear, this time with as autograph letter from the King, nrging me in an ampeable tone to come and help him a trouble-some piece of work on which he was engaged. My pride was fattered at this special invitation. I dreased heatily; I kissed my wife and children, without telling them whither I was going, I simply promised that I would be back by nightfull. Durey conducted me to the Tuilleries, where the King was guarded as if he were in prison. We entered by the private way, and becook onserves to the Aing's workshop, where Durey jist me to unnonnee on arrival. Whist I was alone I remarked an iron door lately forged; a chemard look, very skiintly executed; and a little from caske, with a secret spring, which I could not caske out at first sight. Presently Durey returned with the King. Ah, my poor Ganadh, sald Louis in KVI.; tonching any poor Ganadh, sald Louis in the mean object to suspend my visite, that out of produce towards yourself as well as me I have been obliged to suspend my visite, that out of produce towards yourself as well as me I have been obliged to suspend my visite, whilst were misonderstood. "Whilst I, out of complateance, did this counting, which was not in the line of my trade one while, I saw Durny conveying handles of papers to the secret cabinet. I guessed at once that the money was only a pretext for drawing off my attention. Lam positive that the papers alone were hidden there. The King proposed that I should sup at the chateau before I left, but I refused with a feeling off pride, lest I should be sent to eat with whets; basides, I was anxious to return to my wifa and children. I did not either accept the offer of some one to accompany me to Versallies. I did not either accept the offer of some one to accompany me to Versallies. I did not either accept all the offer of the King's livery, and I materiated Durcy. Why did they dissemble from me the true need of the Iron chest?
